History and Definition of Triple Double

The term "triple double" in basketball refers to a single game performance in which a player accumulates at least ten units in three of five statistical categories: points, rebounds, assists, steals, and blocks. Traditionally, the most common triple doubles involve points, rebounds, and assists. The concept dates back to the early days of professional basketball, but it gained widespread recognition in the NBA starting in the mid-20th century. Achieving a triple double is a clear indicator of a player's versatility and ability to contribute significantly across multiple facets of the game.

Origins of the Triple Double

While the NBA did not officially track all relevant statistics in its early years, the triple double became a recognized metric as the league began to emphasize comprehensive statistical analysis. The first widely documented triple double is attributed to Andy Phillip in the 1950s, although Oscar Robertson and later players brought greater attention to the feat. Over time, the triple double has evolved into a celebrated achievement, often associated with some of the greatest all-around players in NBA history.

Statistical Criteria

To officially record a triple double, a player must reach double digits in three of the following categories within a single game:

- Points
- Rebounds
- Assists
- Steals
- Blocks

Points, rebounds, and assists are by far the most common categories for triple doubles, as accumulating ten or more steals or blocks in a game is exceedingly rare.

Nicknamed "The Big O," Oscar Robertson was the original triple double pioneer. He was the first player to average a triple double over an entire season during the 1961-1962 campaign. His all-around skills set the standard for future generations, and he held the career triple double record for decades. Robertson's balanced scoring, passing, and rebounding made him a formidable opponent and a model of consistency.

Magic Johnson

Magic Johnson was a versatile point guard whose size and court vision allowed him to accumulate multiple triple doubles in his career. Known for his leadership and passing prowess, Magic's triple doubles often combined scoring, assists, and rebounds, reflecting his ability to control every facet of the game. His contributions helped the Los Angeles Lakers win multiple championships in the 1980s.

Their ability to distribute the ball, score, and rebound improves team efficiency and flexibility. Coaches may design plays to maximize these players' strengths, knowing they can contribute in multiple ways.

statistical tracking. Players like Oscar Robertson helped popularize the triple double as a meaningful measure of performance.

This shift has led to more opportunities for players to accumulate assists and rebounds, contributing to a rise in triple double occurrences. Additionally, the rise of positionless basketball has blurred traditional roles, enabling more players to achieve triple doubles.

best triple double in nba history: Why Indiana is the Center of the Basketball World Michael G. Ludlow, 2014-01-23 Basketball is now the second most popular sport world-wide trailing only futbol (soccer) in the number of participants, fans, and leagues. Its popularity is due to the fact that the game of basketball requires the most number of physical skills making basketball players the most complete athletes. The speed, grace and teamwork required to play the game combined with the athleticism required makes it beautiful to watch and fun to play. The United States has always been and always will be the greatest basketball nation. Although the rest of the world has been catching up with us (note the increasing number of international players in the NBA from all parts of the world) we invented it (thank you Dr. Naismith); we perfected it (thank you Coach Wooden, Bill Russell, Larry, Magic, Michael, Lebron, etc.); and we still have the highest concentration of excellence at all levels - high school, college and professional. Indiana has long been known to be basketball crazy. The image of a basketball goal on every garage, barn or any other place you can put one (including the governor's residence) is based, as most legends are, on a ring of truth. Indiana has always been basketball crazy. Decades before "March Madness" became a national trademark, Hoosier Hysteria rippled through the entire state at tourney time. Other states can claim they are the "best" basketball state. Certainly North Carolina does and cases can be made for Kentucky, New York and California. This study provides overwhelming statistical evidence and so much anecdotal support that it is undeniable that Indiana IS the center of the basketball world.
