Detailed explanation of each branch of power

The Legislative Branch

The legislative branch is responsible for making laws and is embodied by the United States Congress, which consists of two chambers: the Senate and the House of Representatives. This branch has the power to draft, debate, and pass legislation that governs the country. It also holds significant powers such as approving budgets, declaring war, and overseeing the executive branch through hearings and investigations.

Key responsibilities of the legislative branch include:

- Creating statutory laws
- Approving federal budgets and expenditures
- Confirming presidential appointments (Senate)
- Impeaching federal officials
- Ratifying treaties (Senate)

The Executive Branch

The executive branch enforces laws and is headed by the President of the United States. This branch includes the Vice President, the President's Cabinet, and various federal agencies and departments. The executive branch implements and administers federal laws and policies, directs national defense and foreign affairs, and manages day-to-day governance.

Core functions of the executive branch include:

- Enforcing laws passed by Congress
- Serving as Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces
- Conducting diplomacy and negotiating treaties
- Issuing executive orders
- Appointing federal officials and judges (with Senate approval)

The Judicial Branch

The judicial branch interprets laws and ensures they are applied fairly. It is made up of the federal court system, with the Supreme Court as the highest authority. This branch reviews laws and executive actions to determine their constitutionality and resolves disputes between states, individuals, and government entities.

Principal roles of the judicial branch include:

- Interpreting and applying the Constitution
- Reviewing laws to ensure they comply with constitutional principles
- Hearing cases involving federal laws and disputes
- Protecting individual rights and liberties
- Serving as a check on the legislative and executive branches
